

Peghqu' Heavy Destroyer

Entered Service: 2380

Overview: With a frame initially laid after the Klingon Civil War, the Peghqu' was designed to be the ultimate answer to to Cloaked Romulan Warbirds crossing into and violating Klingon Sovereign Territory with their cloaking devices.

Warriors crewing the Peghqu' Destroyers often call themselves Bird Hunters. While inspired by the Raptor Scout Ships of old, this vessel is larger, tougher, and with more advanced technology to hunt hidden vessels.

Capabilities: The design goal by the Klingon High Council was to create a ship that could independently patrol the border, scan for hidden starships. If the ship was small enough, the crew of warriors could then destroy the vessel in glorious combat.

Even if this intruder was large enough to outclass the Destroyer, the hope was be durable enough to retreat and call for a battle fleet to deal with the incursion.

Part of it's arsenal was it's Mine-Laying Tubes. Having seen some success in the Azure Nebula, these mines were designed to saturate an area with explosives, limiting the options and angles of entry for cloaked ships and denying them the ability slink away when they meet the might of the Empire.
